Welcome Message

Dear Colleagues and friends,

It is a great honor to be asked to host the 67th Annual Meeting of The Japan Society of Human Genetics (JSHG), a historic and time-honored conference. The next annual meeting is scheduled to be held at PACIFICO Yokohama from Wednesday, December 14 to Saturday, December 17, 2022.

JSHG, founded in 1956, aims to (1) contribute to the advancement of science through human genetics research, (2) promote clinical practice in the field of genetics, (3) contribute to healthcare and welfare through research on diseases and health, and (4) spread knowledge on human genetics within society through education and awareness raising activities. The number of participants has risen each year, and last year, more than 3,000 people attended the annual meeting.

The field of genetic medicine has made dramatic progress in recent years, not only in elucidating the causes and pathological conditions of diseases, but also in elucidating the diversity in physical constitutions and predispositions. Brilliant discoveries are being made one after the other in developing various technologies for use in genome analysis as well as new clinical testing technologies that make use of genome analyses. The field of genetic medicine has also had a major impact on a wide range of other medical fields, including cancer genomics, regenerative medicine, drug development, and vaccines, and work has also begun in the field of precision medicine and other new medical initiatives. The tide of genome science is now sweeping through all health-related fields.

While this has brought us a number of great benefits, there are concerns that, swept along by the tide of such rapid progress in genome science, we may lose sight of its true nature and origins in research and medical care. Which is why we have chosen “Back to Basics!” as the theme of this meeting. We hope that this annual meeting will provide an opportunity to return to the basics of research and medical care within the fields of genome science and human genetics, and to deeply reconsider their essential qualities and true natures, with the goal of further developing the field of genome science. To achieve this, we are inviting not only medical personnel and researchers but also representatives from companies with an interest in genome science, and we would like to make this a meeting where you can interact with others from a broad range of fields, communicating and sharing information.

In order to enhance the meeting and ensure tremendous results, I would very much appreciate your valuable support—together with support from all other sectors and fields. I therefore hope that you endorse the purposes of this meeting and earnestly request that you consider participating.

In closing, I would like to express my sincere wishes for your company's continued growth and prosperity.

Best regards,

Haruhiko Sago MD, PhD

President of the 67th Annual Meeting of the Japan Society of Human Genetics
